ABSTRACT

Announced in this booklet is the availability of the International Demographic Data Directory (IDDD). The IDDD is designed to expedite the retrieval of demographic and family planning statistics for use by administrators, planners, and researchers. This guide describes the computerized system indicating the geographic scope of the data, subject coverage, the sources from which data are acquired, the manner in which information is disseminated, and how one can acquire information from the system. Detailed listings are provided in two areas, geographic and subject. The geographic listing covers major areas of the world, component regions, countries, major subdivisions of countries such as states or provinces, the urban and rural parts of these areas and, where data are available, metropolitan areas, cities, towns, and villages. Subject coverage consists of 11 major subjects with their first, second, and third level component variables. These are economic characteristics; economic indicators; education; family planning activities; fertility; health facilities, personnel, and services; households; marital status, nuptiality, and marital dissolution; migration; mortality; and population. Appended material shows sample printouts from the remote computer terminal. Order forms or request sheets for query service are also included. (BL)

PREFACE AND ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This publication announces the availability of the International Demographic Data Directory (IDDD). The IDDD is designed to expedite the retrieval of demographic and family planning statistics for use by administrators, planners, and researchers concerned with this vital field.

This booklet was prepared in the International Statistical Programs Center by Martha Berger under the general supervision of Samuel Baum, Assistant Chief For Demographic Research, and Carlingford Gray, Chief of the Data Systems Branch. The assistance of Leo Solomon, Ellen Jamison, and Rockwell Livingston at various stages during the preparation of this publication is gratefully acknowledged. The computer programming for the IDDD system was done by Mary Kay Friday and Phil Heinrichs. The Country Name List is adapted from the United Nations Country Code List. Editorial assistance was provided by Helen Bankoski of the Publications Services Division.

The International Demographic Data Directory was developed and is operated under a participating agency service agreement with the Office of Population, Bureau for Population and Humanitarian Assistance, Agency for International Development, Dr. R. T. Ravenholt, Director, and Carl Hemmer, Project Manager.

International Demographic Data Directory

I. Introduction

The International Demographic Data Directory is a computerized bibliography of demographic and family planning data supplemented, where practicable, by the data themselves. Approximately 1,000 tables are currently referenced, and about 2,500 more will be added annually.

The retrieval system associated with this Directory enables the user to obtain references rapidly, either through direct use of his own remote console, or through the submission of requests to the Bureau of the Census, International Statistical Programs Center.

II. Data and Source References

A. Scope of the Data

The system covers information for the world, major areas of the world, component regions, countries, major subdivisions of countries such as states or provinces, the urban and rural parts of these areas and, where data are available, metropolitan areas, cities, towns, and villages. Primarily, emphasis has been placed on information relating to the countries of Africa, Asia, and Latin America There are, however, two exceptions: data from the United Nations, which cover all countries of the world, and data from recent census reports as they become available from any country in the world. See Appendix I for a list of major areas, regions, and countries.

Subject coverage of the system includes information on such demographic data as population characteristics and vital statistics; also included are statistics on family planning program activities, health programs, education, and demographic-related economic characteristics. A list of subjects is provided in Appendix II.

Information on two types of data is included: primary data and adjusted data. Primary data are acquired from such sources as census reports, vital statistics publications, and United Nations documents. The adjusted data referenced in the system are also from a variety of sources. A major source is the International Statistical Programs Center of the Bureau of the Census, which is engaged in evaluating and adjusting demographic data. Working papers and publications prepared in I.S.P. provide adjusted demographic data as well as projections of populations. Other sources of adjusted data include publications of the United Nations, articles from journals, and conferences reports on population and family planning.

B. Major Sources of Information

Selected sources are screened on a regular basis for specific data.

Census reports

Information on all characteristics of the population selected from both preliminary and final census reports are entered into the system. These tables vary from the most common subject of age and sex distributions to more specialized subjects such as economic status cross-classified by educational level. In addition, a limited number of tables on household subjects are included. Most frequently, these relate to number and size of households, usually distributed by type of household.

Sample Surveys

Sample surveys are often the only source for supplying data on population characteristics of a country when a census report is not available. The subject content of such surveys frequently includes familiar census-type information. Special sample surveys, however, also supply certain types of information which are not usually collected in a population census, such as vital events, movement of the population into and out of areas, number of married women with knowledge about contraceptives, number of women who practice birth control and the method they use.

Official statistical publications

Vital statistics are available in monthly, quarterly, and annual official publications of national governments. From these sources, references to current data on births, deaths, marriages, divorces, and migration are selected for inclusion in the system. Some official publications provide data on public health statistics which include, among other subjects, the number of hospital facilities, personnel, cases of abortions, rural health clinics, dispensaries, and deaths by cause.

United Nations

Every table contained in the Demographic Yearbooks is referenced in the IDDD. In addition, reference is made to unpublished data contained on basic questionnaires collected by the U.N. directly from national statistical offices. The subject content of the U.N. tables is broad. Included are all subjects normally covered in a comprehensive population census as well as data on vital statistics. Some other U.N. publications screened and selectively referenced in the system include the Monthly Bulletin of Statistics, Working Papers of the Population Division, Population and Vital Statistics Report, and Compendium of Social Statistics.

Family planning programs

Some countries with organized national family planning programs publish monthly, quarterly, or annual reports on the progress of their programs. Included are data on acceptors according to the method of birth control used, facility and personnel data, number and location of clinics, number of midwives, family planning goals, and budget data.

Some unpublished data on family planning activities are acquired from newsletters and airgrams sent by AID Mission officers or from reports sent by Census Bureau overseas consultants. Population Council publications are another source of information; demographic data and family planning statistics are selectively referenced from its Country Profiles series, Studies in Family Planning, published monthly, and the Reports on Population/Family Planning series.

The International Planned Parenthood Federation's publication, Situation Report, provides population profiles and reports on the activities of IPPF affiliates and the family planning situation in IPPF-affiliated countries.

Population and family planning conference papers are frequently a source for references to special and detailed data.

Other sources

Professional journals are screened for data which have been adjusted according to sound methodological procedures.

The International Statistical Programs Center's internal working papers and publications provide adjusted demographic data and projections of populations. These data relate to measures of fertility and mortality, and to projections of the population using different assumptions about future changes in fertility and mortality. One ongoing project called "Country Demographic Profiles" has its data stored on the computer independently from the IDDD, and is retrievable through the IDDD query or through Country Profile query. The subject content of the Profiles includes information on total population, age and sex distribution of the population, number of births, deaths, natural increase, annual growth rate, sex ratio at birth, married females, migration by age and sex, urban population, school enrollment, labor force participation, agricultural land density, as well as several fertility and mortality measures.

Another source for unpublished data tabulated by I.S.P. is the "Age-Parity Grid System". Based primarily on the Demographic Yearbook, tables in the Grid report births by age of mother and parity, median age, "excess" births by age group, and "excess" births by parity group. The Grid System includes all countries of the world for which age-specific data are available. A publication series of I.S.P. is "Demographic Reports for Foreign Countries": these reports are published irregularly. The main tables of data appearing in the series are projections of the population by sex and single years of age through age 29 and by five-year age groups thereafter. Coverage is from the year of the latest census to around the year 2000. Also presented are the number of births and deaths which underlie these projections.

C. Output from the Directory

Information contained in the IDDD is produced as a printout on remote computer terminals. The information on the printout is of two types: the actual data themselves and the reference to the availability of the data. About one-third of all entries provide data, while the remaining two-thirds are references to tables containing the desired information. For both types the printout provides:

(1) the title of the table of data as it appears in the source;

(2) a description of the data; this includes such notations as quality of the data and extent of coverage;

(3) a citation of the source and, in some cases, how to acquire the data. See Appendix III for a sample printout from the IDDD.

In addition to the printout, the user may request that the data contained in the referenced table, whether stored in the computer or not, be recorded on punch cards in the format he specifies. A fee will be charged to cover the cost of the card punching.

III. Using the Directory

There are two ways to acquire information from the system: (1) by independent access through the remote terminal, and (2) through the intermediary, the Bureau of the Census.

Independent access is possible to users who have remote terminals and are COMNET Corporation customers. (Computer Network Corp. is a private, Washington, D.C. time-sharing corporation.) The confidential nature of some of the Bureau of the Census' data proscribes direct outside access to its computer facilities.

Alternate access may be made by mailing requests to:

International Demographic Data Directory
International Statistical Programs Center
Bureau of the Census
Washington, D.C. 20233

- or by telephoning:

International Statistical Programs Center
Marlow Heights, Maryland
301-763-2870

For mail and phone requests requiring a significant amount of effort, such service will be provided at cost. Users will be sent a cost estimate for approval prior to the processing of such requests.

A set of instructions and a Subject Code List are available upon request, and should be reviewed before final inquiries are made.

The U.N. Demographic Yearbook does not list the islands included in these two groupings. Other sources do not always agree on the inclusion. Therefore, these two groupings are not defined here. In tables of data where these appear, their included islands, if listed in the source, are entered in the descriptive record.

SUBJECT NAME LIST

The Subject Name List consists of eleven major subjects with their first, second, and third level component variables, and about thirty independent modifying terms. The major subjects are identified by upper case type and are listed at the margin. The component variables are listed under each major subject and are indented at one, two, or three levels. The independent modifiers are identified as the other terms listed at the margin and, with the exception of: Abortion, Age, Clinics, Ethnic, and Hospitals, have no component variables. The 11 major subject categories are:

Item 5: Make one subject statement to describe the variables which you want to be cross tabulated within a single table. Example: If you want to know the number of family planning acceptors according to birth control methods used for urban and rural areas, then this would constitute one subject statement and search for only tables with all of the named variables cross tabulated. However, if you want to know the number of family planning acceptors according to birth control methods used, and the number of family planning acceptors by urban and rural areas, then two statements are required and separate forms should be used for each.

If your request is limited to a single cell table, such as crude birth rates, or crude death rates, you may consult the list of Subject Names, Appendix II, and enter the subject names here. In this case, simply write in "crude birth rates" or "crude death rates."

Item 6: More than one country name may be listed if the same cross tabulation is desired for each country.

Item 7: You may be specific or broad. Example: 1950, 1960 and 1970, 1955 – 1965, "any years available", or "latest year available."
